

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

TO THE RANDOLPH ALUMNI: .

At the meeting of the R. S. N. S. Alumni, held in June, 1883, it was voted that class reports, giving, as far as possible, the number of terms of school taught, and the present occupation and address of each graduate since the establishment of the school, should be prepared, and read at the next annual meeting. To that end class secretaries were appointed, and intrusted with the work of looking up the records of their classmates. With two or three exceptions, these reports were prepared. Many, especially among the earlier classes, were quite incomplete. At the meeting of June, 1884, it was voted that a report of Alumni and Instructors be made, supplemented by such other matter as would be of interest to all in any way connected with the school. It has been my task, with the aid of the reports before mentioned, to prepare this record. For the sketches of the life-work of the principals, you are indebted to a prominent graduate and former instructor, who has stamped her work so plainly with her own individuality as to render it unnecessary to give her name. It is a matter of regret to me that the intervention of other duties, and the difficulty of obtaining reports from many a dilatory one, has so delayed the work as to make our little history the record of a year ago, rather than the record of to-day. Where it has been possible for me to do so, I have given the latest information of each graduate, but have no doubt many changes of name, residence and occupation have never reached my knowledge. It is still more to be regretted that, though every effort has been made and ample time allowed, several are still missing from our list, and can only receive the fatal "No information."

Trusting that this little book, unworthy though it must be, may still not be without its value to you, I submit it without further comment.

CAROLINE B. WEYMOUTH,

Cor. Secretary of the Alumni.

RANDOLPH, March, 1885.

THE ORANGE COUNTY GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

The Randolph Academy, or Orange County Grammar School, was established in 1806 in the building now occupied as a dwelling house by Franklin Doten. It was at first located on the site of the present Normal School. Of this school we can judge only by its Alumni. Its value is attested by such sons as Hon. Jacob Collamer, Rev. Azariah Hyde, Rev. Constantine Blodgett, for fifty years pastor of the First Congregational Church of Pawtucket, R. I., Amos Dean, Esq., a celebrated attorney, and principal of the Albany Law School, Gov. Converse and Judge Barrett, Hon. Justin S. Morrill, and a score of lesser lights, whose names will occur to our older readers. The early principals of the school as given by the Vermont Gazetteer are as follows :

William Nutting, 1807-13; D. Breck, 1813-14; Rufus Nutting, 1814-18; George Bush, 1818-19; Samuel Worcester, 1819-20; Joseph Sawyer, 1820-21; Rufus Nutting, 1821-28; Clement Long, 1828-31; John Fairchild, 1831-32; T. G. Brainerd, 1832-36; Samuel A. Benton, 1836-38; Azariah Hyde, 1838-41; Edward Cleveland, 1841.

Complete records of the later principals we have not obtained. In the last decade came R. M. Manley, Andrew Freeman, George Dutton, Mr. Willard, and doubtless others. Next preceding Mr. Conant was Mr. Fisher. Lack of time and space compels us to abridge the record of the old academy, held in such kindly regard by our elders that we of the Normal School can but revere its memory and honor its work.

HOW THE ORANGE CO. GRAMMAR SCHOOL
GAVE PLACE TO THE FIRST VERMONT
STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.

Edward Conant has been fitly styled "The father of Vermont Normal Schools." The propriety of this title will be recognized by all witnesses of the discussions which marked the last years of the Orange County Grammar School, and ended in the establishment of a training school for teachers. The Normal School, already an institution in many states, was viewed distrustfully by trustees and people. The citizens of Randolph had a just pride in their Grammar School, an institution of wide influence and reputation, which had been for many years a powerful factor in the educational work of the state. The Normal School had but one advocate among them, but that advocate was a man having the courage of his convictions, slow to change his opinions, but unyielding when his opinions were once formed. The academy, in Mr. Conant's view, was not the need of the hour. The interests of the state demanded better training for its teachers. All the arguments which much thought and study of the matter could evolve, were brought to bear upon the trustees, and with their consent the change was made in 1866. The results are before us. For years the most bitter opponents of the change have been, if not ardent admirers of the new system, at least acquiescent. Long life to the Normal School, dear to its Alumni and cherished in their hearts forever.

EDWARD CONANT, A. M.

The subject of this sketch is a native of Pomfret, Vt. His youth and early manhood make but a repetition of the well-worn story of New England life. His preparatory course at Thetford was followed by college work at Dartmouth, interspersed with district school teaching. Several years of academy teaching preceded his work as last principal of the Orange County Grammar School, which position he occupied from 1861 to 1867, and as first principal of the First Vermont State Normal School. His supervision of the school was like that of all teachers who remain individuals, peculiar to himself. During these years he formed, not so many theories of his own way of doing things, as facts concerning the defects and excellencies in the teaching of the times, and traced them back to defects and excellencies in the methods of thought. His mind learned to move in straight, clear-cut lines, and though his pupils' minds might take their own route, yet that route must be straight and clear-cut. That seems to be the essence of his mental teaching—a reverence for exact truth exactly stated, and few who have seen it will ever forget his persistence as he insisted upon accurate answers. Few minds that touched his did not take upon themselves habits of looking sharply at every somewhat, and weighing well every word. This was our most valuable acquisition from the class-room,—a method of doing, rather than an overtaxed memory. There was a kindly charity for wrong tendencies and acts, that never came to be felt as a weak compromise with wrong; the rather it seemed humiliating to be thought so weak and untrained, and an aspiration to be wiser and stronger, a pride that fostered growth, came from the judgment. A half-pitiful contempt for the pettiness, the deceit, the would-be cunning of the mischief-makers, either came from a certain twisted smile of his, or else was evoked by that smile from the better natures that were caught off guard. To be made to feel small, or worse, to have an attempt at smartness quite ignored, is usually a fatal punishment. This however was the negative and minor part of the discipline. For the positive, aggressive influence, Mr. Conant generated in his study and in his rambles across the fields and up the rugged hill-sides, a spiritual and mental power that gave an impetus to the heaviest mind, a motion of accuracy to the most vague, a determination to the most vacillating, an ideal so noble and so pure that it made itself seen and felt by the blindest and grossest in the circle of its influence. How many who read these words will feel that they but half express what the man was to them, as he lived before them "each day as if it contained all the days that had been and all that were to be." Of the strength of his presence in the community, as well as in the school, much might be written; the record is kept in the hearts of the people. For six years he served the state as Superintendent of Education, acquiring in the time an accurate knowledge of its schools and its people, working heartily to forward the interests of education by advocating whatever measures seemed to him not only good, per se, but adapted to the field, and by encouraging and abetting whatever good he found being done. After that term of service he put into practice the theories formed in his study of the educational system of Vermont, and of other states, in his new work as principal of the Johnson Normal School. He established a new course of study there, putting the school on a strong foundation of scholarship and method. On the resignation of Mr. Edson, the instant and universal choice of trustees and people was that he should again assume the care of the school, and he has again entered upon his new duties in his old field.

A. E. LEAVENWORTH, A. M.

In December, 1874, the Trustees of the Randolph State Normal elected Principal A. E. Leavenworth, then of Beeman Academy, New Haven, Vt., as Mr. Conant's successor. Retaining his former position until June, 1875, he was assisted at Randolph by Miss Ellen M. Arnold, who, as acting principal, bore bravely and faithfully the responsibility and the work, even after it became too much for her physical strength.

A native of Charlotte, Vt., Mr. Leavenworth's education was gained in district schools, at Hinesburgh Academy, and at the University of Vermont. From the last he graduated in August, 1866, having previously taught five winters of district school, two or three years as Principal of Bolivar Academy, Bolivar, Mo., and one year as Principal of Hinesburgh Academy. After graduating he remained at Hinesburgh for four years, resigning to become Principal and proprietor of Brattleboro Academy, which he changed to a boarding school for young men and boys, whom he fitted for business or for college. He retained this position until ill health compelled him to leave it, just before the breaking out of the rebellion. He and one of his students were the first in Vermont to respond to the call for "three hundred thousand more," and he remained in the service until June, 1865, when he returned with thirty-two men of the company who left with him in '62, the largest number returning from any company in that regiment. He received during the war several promotions, and held offices of responsibility; he led the skirmish line of Vermonters which headed the advance into Richmond, April 5th, and was appointed Assistant Provost Marshal, and assigned to head office in the city; April 30 he became A. A. Adj. Gen. of the Department of the Appomattox, which position he held till his discharge, June 13, '65. He was A. A. Inspector Gen. of different forces at various times during the rebellion, and was ever a faithful and an efficient officer.

When he resumed the occupations of peace it was in the familiar academy at Hinesburgh, where he again taught three years; from 1868 to 1875 he was in charge of the New Haven Academy, which during that time was well endowed, and re-chartered as Beeman Academy. From 1875 to 1879 he held the position mentioned at the opening of this article.

Associated for many years with the teachers of the State in their various combinations and interests, one cannot wonder that the work he did for the Randolph Normal was so fruitful. For about twenty years the fine culture and force of character of Mrs. Leavenworth was helpful in every direction of Mr. Leavenworth's work: even to the actual work of the school-room.

Himself warm hearted, impulsive, generous to a fault, enthusiastic in the work, he became at once a popular teacher at Randolph. His interest extended itself into the lyceum, and all manly and womanly sports in which the students themselves were interested; he developed an esprit de corps, which is not a ready growth among so many widely differing and self-reliant young people, but which is strong and lasting, despite that; he kindled a loyalty to both the earthly and the heavenly fatherland. During his term the school buildings were enlarged and otherwise improved, and the reading room and library took long steps toward the usefulness they were designed to have. An attempt was also made to form a practice school from the village school, but this was hardly a success, owing to its necessarily ungraded condition and to lack of sufficient members.

Much to the regret of a large and earnest circle of friends, Mr. Leavenworth resigned, in July, '79; he spent the two following years in the State, making a fine collection of fossils, and regaining health and strength. In August, '81, he entered upon his new duties as Principal of the Castleton Normal, where he still remains, an earnest, conscientious worker among Vermont's educators.

ANDREW W. EDSON, A. M.

To teach the students what to teach, to suggest how to teach it, by worthy examples, re-inforced by a little, though careful and thoughtful study of theory, this is a good foundation for a Normal School, but a most excellent foundation cannot answer the purpose of the upper structure. So the enterprise of Andrew W. Edson, during the five years from 1879 to 1884 began to build, to make the school more than ever a training school for teachers, to emphasize the how to teach.

Mr. Edson was born in Wisconsin, but was a resident of Brookfield, Vt., from early boyhood. He was a graduate of the district schools, of the Randolph Normal in 1870, of the Vermont Conference Seminary, at Montpelier, in 1874, and of Dartmouth College in 1878. The last eight years of this time was interspersed with the experience in district school teaching that so few Vermont college boys fail to get more or less of. The year previous to his re-entering the Normal he was the popular and successful Principal of the West Randolph Graded School.

Upon taking up the new work, he at once began to make a special study of the professional needs of the school, both by careful reading of theory, and by actual observation of the work done in other Normal Schools of New England, comparing their needs and advantages with our own, introducing tried and approved methods, with such adaptation as our own circumstances required, adding to the curriculum of the school several strictly professional studies, and to the library many books in this special line.

While this gave a decided professional aspect to the school, Mr. Edson never allowed it to absorb the thought of the school. He enlisted a wide-awake interest in all subjects that the people need to know and think of, being himself actively interested in them, and requiring constant reference to the sources of information in the rapidly growing library. More and more the school came to study by topics, more and more the pupils came to see that only their own active thought could reach any satisfactory result in any line. Mr. Edson himself well illustrated the transition of the "ideal teacher" of the last century, from the bookworm of uncertain muscle and digestion and executive ability, to the ideal man of the present day, who is alive in any profession. Some way, the rapid current of real thought tends to keep pure and wholesome the whole being, and young people feel as they come under such an active influence that to live at one's best is worth while; that it is not comfortable to differ with such a life in regard to essential truths.

Mr. Edson carries many a "God-Speed" with him to his new work, in the schools of Attleboro, Mass.
